

Future Teaching Scholars programme - currently recruiting for 2018

The Future Teaching Scholars programme is designed for maths and physics A level students with predicted grades of B or above; students must select a maths- or physics-related degree at an English university and be interested in a career in teaching. The programme is also open to international students, mature applicants, and career changers with equivalent qualifications.

In return for a commitment to teaching, participants receive a £15,000 grant while studying their degree, and classroom experience to prepare them for teaching. After graduating, participants go onto bespoke employment-based teacher training, earning while they learn, working in schools from day one, and receive additional support for 2 years.

Recruitment is underway for students planning to start their undergraduate degree in autumn 2018.

For further information, please visit Future Teaching Scholars and to receive a promotional pack for your school, email info@futureteachingscholars.com.